The dynamics of the key relationship between the US, China and Russia would have great influence over the course of many international relationships involving Japan and South East Asia, India, Europe and West Asia.

He noted the continuing US primacy in the World economy - citing its large share of the market capitalization of world bourses and its continuing role as safe haven for investors during period of uncertainty and change. He noted that China's extraordinary rise in the last 3 decades made it a beneficiary of the globalization policies.

China is at an interesting phase with historically high growth rates, low slowing, persistent dependence on investment and slow transition to a consumption/ services driver economy. China is nevertheless demonstrating confidence in its leadership as reflected in the Davos Summit, its creation of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) and its strategic development of the One Belt and One Road etc.

Mathai also spelt out the implications of change in Russia and the EU. The US questioning North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) now had to decide on the future of North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). This would create alternate scenarios in Europe, which also faced a decisive year with the forthcoming elections in France and Germany capable of changing the EU as we know it.

He felt the Brexit policy of the government would go ahead; concomitants Britain would back out to build stronger relationships in the Gulf, South Asia and Africa.

The rapid growth in India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka and other countries in South Asia is fueling change in the subcontinent's external ties.

The Gulf region in particular, UAE, Qatar and Saudi Arabia would have stronger ties with India. Mathai concluded by saying that nationalism which was now on upswing, would be in balance in years ahead since nationalism could not solve problems of unemployment, industrial decline etc as anticipated. Sooner or later there would be a need to push for a renewed world order based on cooperation on trade, investment and tracking global problems such as climate change.
